"Samuel Rogers was one of the last links in the literary world between the present and the past. And as he was annual the last remaining to us, he joined together times more than commonly remote. His first publication saw the light in 1726, when Louis XVI. reigned in France, and was thinking of the proposed assembly of the rotables in the next year, and when Dr. Chalmers was a little boy playing on the sea-shore at Austruher. He remembered seeing the head of one of the reliefs of $45 still mouldering on Temple Bar. He saw Garrick act. He knecked at Dr. Johnson's door to call on him, and then, with Malitby retreated, their hearts failing them. He heard Sr. Joshua Reynolds deliver his last lecture at the Royal Academy. He knew La Fayette. He breakfasted with Adam Smith and Principal Robertson, Erskine, Fox. Sheridan, Burke, Pitt, Nelson, the Dutchess of Gordon. Howard the Pallanthropist, Sir Thomas Lawrence, 3rs. Siddons, Scott, Georgiana, Duchess of Devorshire, Mackintosh, the Great Dake, Talleyrand, and many more of the illustrious of our grandfathers or fathers' day or our own youth, come back again for a gimpee in these excess and pass before us as they once were. Curious, very curious, this resurrection of the mighty dead! In Britain, Rogery's Table-Talk has engrossed attention, and we believe it will widely engage it here also." TOILING AND HOPING;

THE STORY OF LITTLE HUNCHBACK.

It is a pleasing and touching story.

Says The New York Studay Times:

"We found a tear standing upon our cheek before we had read twenty pages; and we pity the head or the heart that cau peruse it through and not feel chestened by the experiment."

Says The Anburn Daily Advertiser:

"The book is a decided hit. The author comes before the public in a modest and onessuming sach, and offers for its judgment her first book. The holds which the work will gradually gain upon the public are:

"etc. It is interesting.

"2d. It is heastifully written.

"3d. It is influence will be good, as it is based upon the pure spirit of religior, although the cast of the work is not sobet.

"4th. The changes of scene, while natural, are sufficiently sudden and exciting as not to allow the interest to day."
